

JAMES OUTRAM MORRIS was the second son of the late Rev. W. Morris of Sydenham, Thame, Oxon. He was born at Ramsay on January 2, 1886, and entered Oundle (Sidney House) in January 1902, leaving school in July 1905.

Prominent on the football field, he played for the school in 1903 and 1904.

After leaving school Morris went up to Emmanuel, but his Cambridge course was much interrupted by illness. He took a second class in the natural science tripos of 1910. Leaving Cambridge, he took a mastership at Stone, Staffordshire, and, later, one at Rugby.

When war broke out he joined the Artists' Rifles, his eyesight preventing him from obtaining a commission.

As a non-commissioned officer he was very popular with men and officers. He fell on October 30, 1917, while leading an attacking party.
